QT IMPACT ON EUROZONE CURVE & SPREADS

QT is catching up the periphery (change in ECB holdings, EURbn)

*Change in ECB holdings for APP (since Mar) and PEPP (since Feb) shown for all public sector securities. *For EGBs only. For EGBs only, and assuming PEPP QT starts from March. Sources: ECB, BNP Paribas

Since March 2023 for the PSPP, and since Apr/May for the PEPP. Sources: ECB, BNP Paribas

In April we flagged how long-end peripheral issuers were at greater risk of steepening from QT

A darker red colour indicates a greater impact of QT, which would be relatively more bearish for that segment. Source: BNP Paribas

- "2024 will be a FI year". Does that mean the record supply backdrop is fully priced in in the US and what about the Eurozone. Should the focus turn again on the evolution of the economic and CBs cycle
- 2023 saw diversification in terms of products with in particular retails bonds. How sustainable is retail demand?
- The market deals well with Passive QT. But should the market be talking about active QT or is it premature?
